

Both models could recognize the digits, but the fine-tuned model performed better overall. The baseline model eventually got the right answer but was less consistent. The fine-tuned model had a higher success rate, especially on digits it was trained on with my personal data. Fine-tuning helped because it learned my specific way of drawing each digit.

Before fine-tuning:

Found 6 (127)

[illegible]

Fine-tuned:

[illegible]

```

.....
.....
.....
.....
.....
.....
.....
.....
      ##
.....
    #####
.....
              ##
.....
              ##
.....
              #
.....
              ##
.....
          ##
.....
        #####.#
.....
          ###
.....
            ##
.....
            #
.....
          ##
.....
        #####
.....
            ##
.....
            ##
.....
            ##
.....
        ##         ##
.....
        ###   #####
.....
            #

```

[illegible]

```
. . . . .
. . . . .
. . . . .
. . . . .
. . . . .
.

#.
#.
#.

##
              ##
              #
              #
              #
          #   #
        ###  ##
           ###
```
